BERLIN, Aug. 5.—The following dispatch has been received here from Neider Lauterbach, a small village on the Lauter River, near Wissenburg, dated 9 o'clock This day (Friday) morning:

We have won a brilliant but bloody victory. The day and night was the attacking party, and consisted of the Crown Prince's army, which was joined from the second battalion. This force carried by assault, under the eyes of the Prince Royal, the heights of Geisberg, Kloster Berg, Fleckenberg, and Gutenberg. Bonnet's division of Marshal MacMahon's Corps was driven out of the entrenched camp, and retreated in the direction of Reichshoffen. Douay's division was defeated. Many thousand prisoners were taken. The Prussian General Kirchbach was wounded. Many officers were killed and wounded. The Prussian loss is great. The French loss is much greater. The fighting is in progress.

A general advance here and at Saarbruck is ordered.

The Prussian's cable special from London, 5th, says: No French account of the Wissenburg defeat has been received here. The Times this morning says: The French army is in full retreat. Our correspondence telegraphs from Paris that he has the official information that the French have taken their positions in full retreat.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Times this morning says: The plan of the Prussian campaign is developing. General Moltke has been busily engaged since the battle of Saarbruck in preparing for the great battle which is now raging. The Crown Prince of Prussia is directing it. The Crown Prince of Prussian Charles will push forward and attack Douay.

The latest advices from the northwest indicate that the first great engagement and most fatal battle will be fought in the vicinity of Saarbruck, or Saarlouis. The Prussian army of the Crown Prince of Prussia has been massed in that vicinity for the purpose of effecting a junction with the army of the Crown Prince of Prussian Frederick Charles, and then with the combined forces to crush the French army.

Private despatches from Paris report, the Prussians have been greatly outnumbered in the recent engagements, and that the advantage is with the French.
